02 THE PROBLEM · DEVELOPERS

Developers carry commission costs on every sale

Paying brokers on time strains cash flow.

Developer pays commission to — Brokerage pays a share to — Broker

THE NEED

A partner that pays brokers now and is repaid later

MOST EXPOSED

Smaller developers

Limited access to funding, so commission is paid from project cash.

02 THE PROBLEM · BROKERAGES

Brokerages cannot forecast commission income

Payment dates are uncertain, and only large brokerages can enforce them.

Developer pays commission to — Brokerage pays a share to — Broker

	LARGE BROKERAGE	SMALL BROKERAGE
Certainty of payment date	No	No
Leverage over the developer	Yes	No
Outcome	Absorbs the delay	Many exit the market

Earlier payment would fund the marketing that drives developer sales.

02 THE PROBLEM · BROKERS

Brokers wait up to five months to be paid

About two months to close a deal, then two to three months for the commission.

Developer pays commission to Brokerage pays a share to Broker

Living costs continue

Rent and bills fall due while commission is pending.

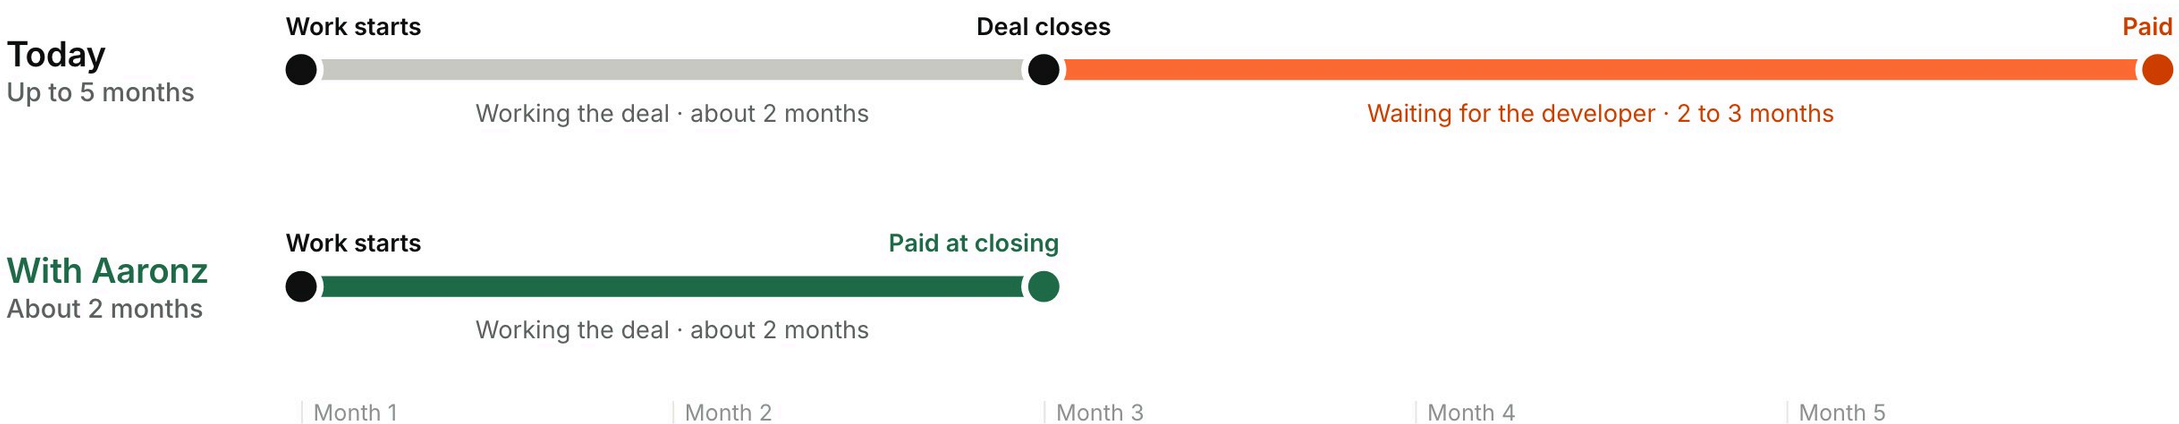

Limited mobility

Brokers cannot change agency until commission is paid.

Indicative timeline.

Aaronz fills the market gap

Time until the brokerage is paid.

Aaronz pays the brokerage through a finance partner, and the developer repays the partner.

03 THE SOLUTION

A finance partner pays the brokerage the same day

Aaronz provides the platform. The partner approves and funds each invoice, and the developer repays the partner.
